Eird Made Much Trouble

When belephone service sudden's stepped between Melbourne and Altory, Australia, says the Pathfinder Magazine, a long careful search rerealed that the cause of the trouble was a magple. This busy bird had built a nest on the top of a pole-a nest 14, inches across and about 8 inches deep. The size of the nest would not have mattered, but evidentily intent on making the new home durable and solid, the magple had used several pieces of wire which has been snipped off and left on the ground by repair men. One of the pheces of wire was in contact with two wires of the line, which naturally caused a short circuit and stopped the

Trout Ponds

Dick Smith has built ten trout rearing ponds on his land and the land of A. R. Gay at Edray. The ponds have an average length of fourteen feet, and are over four feet in width, with a depth of six to ten inches. The ponds are cased in with heavy boards, and the water pours from one pond to another. The botcover up the place where the plaster's toms are nicely graveled. These pands are fed by a bold, never failing spring. This spring furnished the water required by the tankard of the late Jacob Smith for many years.
